Philippe Aractingi's "Heritages" is a deeply personal take on his family's repeated pattern of flight from and return to a country traumatized by more than its fair share of strife. Using a mix of re-creation, home movies and archival sources, he traces generations of displacements and homecomings, using his wife, kids and mother to play forebears when they are not being themselves. The documentary weaves a poignant, elegant tapestry about the meaning of exile.
